Age and educational qualification are not the barriers of producing qualitative research papers. Rather it is the interest, involvement, and commitment of an individual fine-tuned by a mentor in the right way. This issue consisting of research papers structured in an empirical method is the outcome of classroom projects sculpted by the first year students of VIT University, Vellore, Tamilnadu, India. All these papers focus on a common issue related to the difficulty faced by students entering college from regional medium schools and from schools located in rural areas of India. The authors tried to come with a feasible solution for this thoughtful issue with their observations and literature review. They also suggested five activities each which may be useful for the learners from regional medium schools and for students who lack in English communication. These activities focus on helping the learners in all the four skills and some of the subskills. The authors also furnished the procedures to be followed to execute each activity and the outcome of those activities.

These papers are premeditated step by step in the English classroom with terrific passion. Every single paper is processed through TURNITIN and originality is proved.

I am blessed to be a part of VIT University, Vellore where SKY IS THE LIMIT. Extraordinary Management, Amazing Academic Designers, Supportive Heads, Excellent Colleagues, Conducive classroom setting and Fantastic Students.

I vow to be me- I love to be a Teacher
